

Treatment helps Ken play it again

This spring Ken Lawson of Florence suffered from pain, numbness and tingling in his neck that ran down his left arm to his fingers.

While playing tennis doubles in a semi-final tournament at Five Seasons, the pain became so intense, he had trouble gripping the racquet, and although his team won the semi-finals, he could not play in the finals.

Lawson realized he needed help. A fellow tennis player suggested he go to Dr. Gary Callioni at the Chiropractic Rehab Center on Buttermilk Pike.

After two weeks of treatment, Lawson's pain and numbness went from constant to intermittent, and by three weeks the pain was gone.

"I am very pleased with Dr Callioni's knowledge, and his treatment of the problem," said Lawson.

"On my first visit he explained my condition in such detail that for the first time I felt a real sense of clarity."

Dr. Callioni knew immediately what was causing Lawson so much pain.

"Ken had a pinched nerve that was caused by a degenerative disc, and osteoarthritis in the cervical spine," he explained.

"After diagnosing the condition, I put him on a plan that consisted of spinal adjustments, core exercises, and spinal decompression."

According to Dr. Callioni, Lawson now understands that with his current treatment and his new-found knowledge on how to take better care of his body; he will be able to continue doing the things he loves, without the interference of pain.

"We are happy to report that Ken is playing tennis and golf again," said Dr. Callioni. "He is now pain-free."
