

Dr. Callioni helps you get 'back' to work

Carol Faulkner has a strenuous occupation. As the owner/operator of a commercial cleaning business, she relies on strength and agility to do her job. So when chronic shoulder and hip pain threatened her livelihood, she became concerned.

"I'd had pain for a while, and I just tried to tolerate it. But the type of work I do was really aggravating the problems," she says. "I just kept hoping it would all go away."

When it didn't, she knew she needed help. "I had trouble getting up and down the stairs, and getting out of a chair. I felt like I was 100 years old," she says. But there was another concern: "If I didn't do something about it, I was afraid I wouldn't be able to continue working."

The Florence resident remembered reading a story about Dr. Callioni, and how he had helped someone with similar problems. She made an appointment immediately. By her third visit, her shoulder pain had noticeably improved and has since vanished; in less than two weeks, the hip pain was nearly gone. Today, she feels great and gives a lot of credit to the combination of chiropractic adjustments, core exercises and flexibility training demonstrated and prescribed by the doctor. "I learned how important those are; they really help retrain the body," she says.

But there's another reason she'd recommend Dr. Callioni to others whose pain may be affecting their jobs.

Dr. Callioni with patient Carol Faulkner of Florence.

"He's a real people-person. He takes his time and listens to your concerns," she says. "Plus, he explains things thoroughly and with a lot of patience. You don't find that very often. "He's just been an absolute blessing for me."
